Radiation Health Physics

School of Nuclear Science and Engineering (NSE) today Radiation health physics is a specialized program in the School of Nuclear Science and Engineering for students with a professional interest in the field of radiation protection. Small quantities of radioactivity exist naturally in the soil, water, and air. Ionizing radiation is used in a variety of beneficial ways, including energy production, medical treatments, transportation safety, medical diagnoses, quality assurance, etc. HP's protect workers and the public from potential hazards associated with exposure.

Radiation Health Physics graduates are highly employable and tend to work where radionuclides and radiation are used or produced:

- Nuclear Power Plants
- Academic and research institutions
- Government agencies (federal, state, local)
- Consulting Firms
- National Labs
- Medical Facilities

Your Bachelor's Degree (BS) in the College of Engineering

- A minimum of 180 credits are required for graduation; 60 must be upper division (300 and 400-level courses).
- A maximum of 135 credits earned at a community college may be applied toward a bachelor's degree at OSU.
- Some courses can count towards your major and the Baccalaureate Core. Advisors can assist in selection.
